    Assurance Co. building (1867) is to the south, and the former Universalist Church (1839) is on the north. East side renewal will change the character of Main Street in this area by removal of buildings (Mansion Block) contemporary to this one on opposite side of street.

SIGNIFICANCE

18. HISTORICAL OR ARCHITECTURAL IMPORTANCE: This building is a composite of two buildings. The north section (2 1/2 storeys, 3-bays) was probably built ca. 1835 by Joshua Stow and operated as a store by him. Stow was postmaster of Middletown 1815-18, 1821-41. From 1845 to 1889 the building was owned by William Trench and his heirs, and was leased out to several tenants. Among these were George Redfield who operated a saloon/restaurant from 1863 to 1881, and the Middletown Police, who used the premises as the first police station in Middletown from 1882 to 1887. The south section (2 1/2 storeys, 3-bays; 22'x50') was owned by Stephen Crittenton and heirs from 1817 to 1876. This section is listed as one of two stores owned by Crittenton in his will. The possibility exists that both sections were erected simultaneously, allowing the respective owners to save costs by sharing a common wall. In 1876-1891 John Bailey owned and operated a store here which sold stoves and sheet metal ware.

Alterations, including the addition of a full third story and a new front facade, were probably made ca. 1891 when the Middlesex Mutual Assurance Co. acquired title to both sections. The building's architectural character dates from these alterations. The building has (as far as can be proven) always been used commercially.
